Dewitt Andrews, an elder in the West End Presbyterian Church, who caused a storm of protest against ail kinds of recreations on Sunday to break over the heads of the 900 commissioners as they were considering a report of the assembly special committee on Sabbath observance. The report of the committee had been read by its chair-committee had committee had been read by its chairman, James Yearsnee, an elder in the Central Church, New York. Mr. Andrews arose to champion the cause of the friends of Sunday sports, especially golf and Sunday baseball. He had barely stated the object of his remarks when there arose a clamor of objections to his proceeding with his pleat for outdoor recreations for the army of records who are shut up in offices, shops people who are shut up in offices, shops and factories all the week.

We are in accord in objecting to baseball for gain, and horseracing, out of which no good can come." Continuing, he asked: "Does the General Assembly of 1916 want to stand on record as disapproving all sorts of games on Sunday" Whereupon there came from all over the assembly "Yes, yes!"

Mr. Andrews continued: "In the old Scotch-Irish Church golf was forbidden during hours of church services on the Sabbath, but they played golf later in the day." Occasionally a bill has gone through with a 'rider,' as, for instance, one recently in New England to legalize the sale of 'gasolene oil and tires' on Sun-day. Wherever strong state and dis-trict Sabbath organizations are located a successful defence is maintained and safe and progressive measures at time are put through. The Assembly observed a half-holiday this afternoon.

The committee on bills and overtures heard representatives of the Presbytery of New York—the Rev. Robert Watson, Edgar W. Work, Harlan G. Mendenhall, A. H. Limonze, Robert L. Johnston and Judge Andrews—defend the Presbytery against the charges which have been preferred by the presbyteries of Cincinnati and Fort Wayne.

The committee was still in secret session at a late hour to-night, and it was predicted that several more sessions of the committee would be necessary before it could decide on the recommendations to be made to the assembly.
